The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the general principles of the theory of the structure of the atomic nucleus. It is shown that the nucleus is a system of protons and neutrons, which are bound together by the strong interaction. The binding energy of the nucleus is determined by the balance of the attractive and repulsive forces between the nucleons. The strong interaction is characterized by a short range and a high strength, which leads to the formation of a stable nucleus. The binding energy per nucleon is a measure of the stability of the nucleus, and it is found that the most stable nuclei are those with a binding energy per nucleon of about 8 MeV.
